(Statement 1) Scientific research has found that taking supplements of two compounds normally found in muscles - creatine and HMB (B-hydroxy-B-methylbutyrate) support muscular function. Creatine provides muscles with additional energy during workouts involving intermittent, exhaustive exercise by replenishing ATP levels necessary for muscular contractions. HMB is a by-product of the metabolism of an essential branched-chain amino acid, leucine. In human clinical trials, HMB helped improve strength and recovery from exercise.
